WINNIE RUTH JUDD STARTS FIGHT FOR HER LIFE TODAY

Arizona's Most Sensational Trial Gets Under Way at Phoenix

HAS THREE LAWYERS

Beautiful Young Matron Is Charged With Murder of Two Women

By Arthur L. Marek
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

PHOENIX, Ariz., Jan. 19.—(INS)—A frail but beautiful young woman began a fight for her life here today.

The State of Arizona wants to hang Winnie Ruth Judd because she killed two other young women, boon companions, and packed their bodies in the dripping trunks which were shipped from Phoenix to Los Angeles.

So the machinery of the law was all set today to try the "velvet tigress," charged with the double murder of Hedvig Samuelson and Agnes Anne Lerol.

But she has not been left alone in her fight. She was being aided by three able lawyers. Her aged and trusting parents are here to comfort her. Her loyal husband hovers near to advise her. Then, too, there is her young brother, ever ready to help his "sis."

Those who will sit in judgment upon her are men. They will be chosen from a jury panel comprised of bronzed ranchers, sturdy cattlemen, cotton planters, farmers and fruit growers from desert towns and hamlets and merchants and business men of this and nearby cities.

On the sidelines are people who live in Phoenix and those who have flocked here for Arizona's most sensational trial.

They hope to catch a glimpse of the willowy "trunk murderers" and they want to hear all about the Phoenix bright night life on which Winnie Ruth Judd had embarked with her friends.

For the people of Phoenix, Winnie Ruth Judd is somewhat of a secondary attraction. Interest, mounting to fever heat, is centered right now on what a fellow townsman may have to say at the trial.

He is J. J. "Happy Jack" Halloran, "troubadour play-boy," whose name was on every lip.

He was expected to be found among the 62 State witnesses when their names were called today in the Superior Court of Judge Howard C. Speakman.

There also was an expectancy names of other Phoenix playboys would be heard when the lists were read.

It was Jack Halloran who met Mrs. Judd shortly after she came here from Texas in the summer of 1930, friendless and alone.

A companionship was formed and then Mrs. Judd introduced the wealthy lumberman to her two chums, Miss Samuelson and Mrs. Lerol.

Halloran took an interest in the slight "Sammy," an invalid patient and her nurse-companion, "Anne," who looked after her.

The three women and Halloran became close friends and together they trod along a gay path of destiny.

The prosecution has summoned Halloran in an attempt to establish or explain a motive for the tragedy which ended the lives of two of the women.

In order to prove its charges of premeditated murder, the state is seeking to learn whether jealousy may have crept into the lives of Mrs. Judd and her chums and prompted the killings.

Mrs. Judd's lawyers contend no motive exists and they are relying upon an insanity defense to keep the State from placing a noose around her slender throat.

Mrs. Judd's jailers reported that she was calm and confident. Early this morning she dressed for her day of days, putting on the new finery for which her husband, Dr. William C. Judd, toured all of the shops in town to have her look her best.

Cyclist Injured When Hit By Auto at Wheatstheaf

John Dolberg, Second and Fillmore streets, Philadelphia, was injured when struck by an automobile while riding his bicycle last evening.

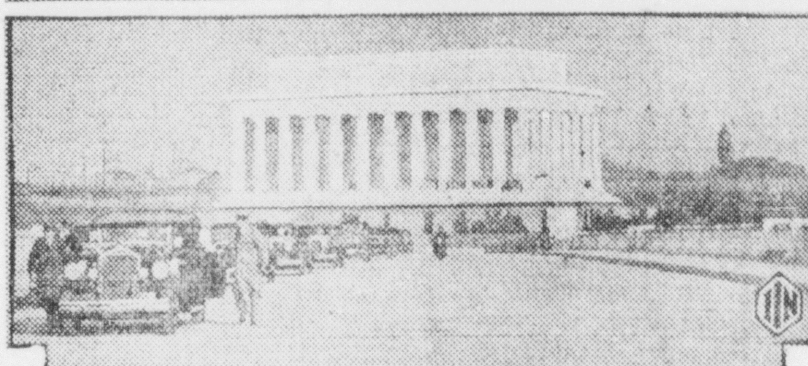

The accident occurred at the Wheatstheaf bridge on the highway. Dolberg was struck by a machine operated by Mairo Ardizzone, Mansion street. Ardizzone stated lights from an approaching car blinded him, and he did not see Dolberg who was traveling in the same direction, from Trenton to Bristol.

DOYLESTOWN COUNCIL ENDS ITS FISCAL YEAR

1931 is Closed With Borough $12,000 Better Off Than Last Year

AN EFFICIENT SYSTEM

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 19.—Borough Council in session last night approved the annual statement of finances of the Borough of Doylestown as audited and later approved by the finance committee. All told, in spite of the depression, Doylestown's housekeeping was run very efficiently and it was possible to close the year $12,000 better off than the previous year.

All this was done in spite of the fact the borough taxes were reduced 3 mills to offset the increase in assessments, the result being less than $100 difference in the incomes.

An elaborate street improvement program was carried out in 1931 by a very efficient street committee. The construction and rebuilding work under the direction of Street Commissioner William B. Michener brought forth much warranted praise for him. Doylestown's streets now compare with any borough of this size in the State.

In 1931 the usual half mill tax for fire company purposes was eliminated as a part of the plan of economy practiced by the borough. The fire company had a sufficient balance on hand from previous appropriations in former years.

The water department receipts were smaller in 1931 owing to the largest list of delinquent water rents on record, but as a result of strict economy in this department, the net proceeds were about the same as usual. A new well was sunk and capped for emergency use.

The sewer department was able to resume their sinking fund payments from current receipts to the borough to take care of interest on borough bonds issued for sewer purposes and still show a small balance.

The statement of finances was prepared by Borough Treasurer Horace M. Mann. During 1931 the amount of orders passed reached a total of $89,254.50. The balance on hand January 1, 1931, amounted to $569.29. Receipts of the borough in 1931 amounted to $98,465.15, including $52,301.74 tax duplicate.

The debt of Doylestown borough totals $170,400 at the present time, including $154,900 which is the amount of bonds outstanding less $16,000 (Continued on Page 6)

SEIZE $50,000 LIQUOR CARGO

Philadelphia, Jan. 19.—Shelled by a coast guard patrol boat the Schooner "Imp" laden with a cargo of rum, surrendered today in Delaware Bay off Ship John Light. Four persons and a load of liquor valued by coast guardsmen at $50,000 were reported seized aboard the vessel. The ship will be brought to the local dock and the rum and prisoners turned over to the customs officials. Capture of the boat may solve the murder of Sammy Grossman, small time racketeer, police here hope. Among Federal agents, the "Imp" was known as Grossman's boat and its capture may shed light on his killing a few weeks ago.

NOT TO CONVENE LEGISLATURE

Harrisburg, Jan. 19.—Speculations concerning the possibility of another special session of the Pennsylvania General Assembly to deal with the unemployment relief were virtually at an end today. Answering H. Gates Lloyd, chairman of the Lloyd Committee which is directing unemployment relief in Philadelphia, Governor Pinchot indicated he will not assume the responsibility of summoning the legislators here again this spring. The Governor's answer to Lloyd was categorical but it conveyed that another session would be futile in the executive's judgment.

"GUS" SAYS THAT'S A SUMMER JOB

(By "The Stroller")

Gustav Pitzonka, Halmerville, really doesn't mind cutting grass on his spacious lawn during the summer-time, but he seriously objects to having that job thrust upon him in mid-January, especially when there are fires to attend to, and ashes to take up one's time.

"I've mowed grass for many, many years," says Mr. Pitzonka, "but I've never before had to do it in the middle of the winter."

With the summer-like weather the green on the terraces of the Pitzonka lawn became greener and ever so long. If just didn't look neat, Mr. Pitzonka decided, so he proceeded to take the lawn mower from under cover, oil it up, and commence pushing.

Other signs of spring in that borough are in evidence. A pussy-willow tree at the home of Thomas Schatt is in bloom.

COMPANIONSHIP

"God, love and money" are given as the "three prime consolations known to man in the difficulty of his life" by Christopher Morley. Morley says that with all three consolations man is supremely happy, with one of them he is contented and with none of them his life is filled with despair and is empty of all joy.

Every community knows its members who having God ask nothing more from life. With them God is love and money and life itself. There are other men and women who have love and desire nothing more. They obviously give neither thought nor care to God or money. As for the members of the human family who are happy with their "money bags," they appear contented in their work of making and spending money. All three of these groups seem to find life worth the living and are probably seldom heard to complain.

But perhaps there is a fourth consolation unsung by sage Morley, but none the less consoling to man. This fourth consolation is the power to think. There is no greater consolation than the ability to think alone. Relatively few people can tolerate meditating solitude, but many envy those who can. There are men and women who know of no better company than their own thoughts. They are called philosophers and their thoughts and words are eagerly sought after by solitude-fearing people. We will extend Morley's prime consolations to include "thought."

Consoling ourselves with thought don't we finally find that all four consolations are but symbols of something else—companionship? Why does man turn to God, love, money or his thoughts but for company? Isn't it a fact in the final analysis that man's one consolation is society, not necessarily of people, but of something? Some then will find consolation in God, others in love, others in money and still others in their thoughts, but all in the companionship thus offered to them.

GREED THE MOTIVE

Certain people who scoff at the religion of the ancients would rearrange the scheme of society and do away with private ownership. Their theory is that all properties should be held in common, that the abilities of all should be pooled and the earnings of all used to benefit all.

Critics of the scheme point to the fact that man is selfish and lazy, and assert that nothing less than the hope of a selfish and personal profit could inspire him to exert himself. They argue, moreover, that sponsors of the scheme are inspired solely by a desire to get something they have failed to earn in competition with their fellow men—that their motive is greed, and therefore no more worthy than the motive of any hard-boiled and selfish go-getter.

It is a very good scheme, as any body can see. All that is required to make it a complete and everlasting success is a world full of people wholly unselfish—people who prefer to work for the other fellow's good rather than for their own—people who will deny themselves rather than see another in want.

Finding the Way Out

"The GAY BANDIT of the BORDER" by TOM GILL

SYNOPSIS

In the Mexican desert, a masked rider, his gun still warm, hides in the sheltering mesquite as the cavalry ride past. They stop beside the prostrate figure of a man, "Lopez!" they exclaim, and a shiver runs through the group. A jeering laugh bursts down from above, and gazing up they see the masked rider outlined against the sky. Across the border, tall and handsome Ted Radcliffe arrives at Verdi Junction. He is met by a pretty girl who drives him to the home of his friend, Bob Harkness. She leaves without giving her name.

CHAPTER III

Lunch over, he went out to the corral where, in the shadow of the saddle house, a grizzled Mexican sat braiding a leather quirt. He touched his sombrero as Radcliffe approached.

"I am Manuel," the Mexican announced in slow Spanish. "Can I serve the señor?"

"Just now, Manuel, the best of service would be a horse to ride. Will you saddle one?"

But Manuel within the next few minutes saddled two horses, and, handing the reins of the larger animal to Radcliffe, said casually, "Don Bob would not have the señor ride alone on this, his first day."

Smiling, the big man nodded and they turned south toward the Mexican boundary, Radcliffe ahead, the old Mexican shuffling along at a tireless trot, while silently he told himself that the big Eastern gringo could at least ride.

Presently they dropped down from the mesa into a little river valley which, Manuel told him, marked the Mexican line. Here they watered their horses, then crossed and bore still farther south into Mexico. To the left a ranchhouse appeared, from whose chimney a blue pencil of smoke pointed straight upward, bringing to the horsemen that sweet, acrid smell of burning mesquite. On either side little checkerboard fields of green told of spring's coming, and of farm crops just breaking through the soil. They told, too, of toil and care in the face of adversity, and of unending battle waged against the desert's stern hostility. It was an outpost, that ranch, an outpost of man, the homemaker, invading the desert. Beyond the water-tank's motionless windmill a few cattle rested after the day's grazing.

All the world was hushed. The benediction of a desert afternoon brooded over the land—the friendliness of tilled fields and human habitation. To Radcliffe, the utter peace of it held him.

He was about to speak when a shrill scream pierced the stillness and straightened both men bolt upright in their saddles. Again that agonized scream, and from behind the ranchhouse a barefoot peon boy fled toward them in shrill terror down the slope. Behind him two Mexican vaqueros ran clumsily in high-heeled boots, lashing the boy with their quirts, cutting through the thin shirt until again he screamed in an ecstasy of pain. With each stinging blow the boy leaped frantically into the air, and at each jump his pursuers laughed and struck again. Once he fell, but staggered to his feet beneath a hail of blows.

As Radcliffe spurred forward, the boy caught sight of him, and with redoubled speed made for the rider. Seizing his stirrup, he turned upward a suppliant face, revealing across his dark cheek the deep welt of a quirt.

"Help me, señor," he cried in Spanish, and even as he spoke the leading vaquero seized him and raised his quirt to strike again.

Radcliffe's leg flashed over the saddle horn. He seemed to strike

"Get out," he ordered briefly, "before I twist your neck."

the ground and the vaquero at the same instant, and in the next second the nearer Mexican rose in the air, turned twice, then sprawled face down upon the sand. In consternation his companion halted, and after a moment of stupefied silence called to Manuel in Spanish, "Who is this gringo fool that he interferes with the riders of Paco Morales?"

Before Manuel could reply, Radcliffe himself answered. "Come just a little nearer, amigo, and I will interfere yet again." The giant muscles of his shoulders twitched as he eager to strike. The vaquero thoughtfully stepped back a pace.

Gently Radcliffe spoke to the boy. "Why do they beat you?"

"Because I watered my father's cattle at the stream, señor. They say the stream is low and that the water belongs to Paco Morales."

"Is this so?" He looked up at Manuel.

The old Mexican shrugged. "The stream belongs to all. But the herdsmen of Morales do not suffer others to use it."

"How can they prevent it?"

Moodily Manuel nodded toward the vaqueros. "Paco Morales has more than a hundred riders. They shoot well and are unafraid. That is why men who are wise do not dispute them."

The boy's frightened eyes looked up at his pursuers. "But the water from our well has dried. Is it the will of God my father's cattle should die?"

Twirling his quirt the vaquero laughed. "I am no priest. But certainly it is not the will of Paco Morales that you should use his water or his grass." Again he scowled at Radcliffe. "Jito, our leader, will soon make this gringo regret he ever raised a hand against one of our riders."

Grimly Radcliffe smiled back. "If you would only come a little closer, I might make it two of your riders." He raised the man to his feet and thrust him toward his comrade. "Get out," he ordered briefly, "before I twist your neck."

Suddenly the Mexicans turned up the hill, and, reaching in his pocket, Radcliffe dropped a silver dollar into the peon's hand. But Manuel's face was troubled as they rode back toward the border.

"It is not often, señor, that one touches a herdsman of Jito's band," he said at last. Then, after a moment's silence he chuckled aloud. "Qué va, how that carrion flew through the air! He looked admirably at the great muscular body and the thick neck. 'But the fellow was right. Jito will try to tear you apart for this.'"

"Do you think he could?"

Again Manuel took in the big, tightly knit form, the arched chest, and arms like flexible steel. "Now, by Our Lady, I do not know," he said doubtfully. "There is none on the border one half so strong as Jito. Caramba! It would be a fight worth living for."

In silence they rode slowly up the long slope toward the mesa, and Radcliffe, remembering his dinner appointment at the military post, touched spurs to his horse, reaching the ranchhouse full five minutes ahead of the perspiring Manuel. He hurried into his evening clothes just as an army car drew up before the bungalow, and was driven through a crimson desert sunset to the little cavalry post that lay on the outskirts of Verdi. Thirty-five years ago it had been a refuge against hostile Navahos in the days when Verdi itself was a turbulent camp. But now for many a year the well-kept military reservation had dozed through a long, uneventful succession of commanding officers. Before the quarters of the latest of these the car stopped, and Radcliffe read the sign over the vine-covered porch, "L. R. Blount, Major, U. S. A."

It was Mrs. Blount who received him—Aunt Clara, he remembered, the girl had called her.

From the first he liked this vigorous, middle-aged woman. Liked the firm handshake, the keen, straight look and the deep restful voice.

"I sent for you before the others." She led him to the broad fireplace. "That was partly selfishness to have to myself the new mysterious arrival. And then I can describe the menagerie before it arrives. For, like a perfect hostess, I've invited everybody that matters—and several that don't."

Will You Help Those who are Willing to Work?

A number of men, women and girls of various vocations, who are willing to work but cannot find employment, have registered with the Bristol Unemployment Bureau.

Many of these have dependents and are the heads of families who find themselves in stringent circumstances during this time of depression.

A list of all such persons is available to those desiring the services of such a person or persons, regardless of the length of time for which such employment might be offered.

You are asked to make some sacrifice. Do your share by providing work for one or several days at your home or place of business.

If those who are able will give employment to these folks and thus aid them to earn that which they need, they will be accomplishing a two-fold purpose.

TRICKS of MAGIC EXPLAINED by Will L. Lindhorst

A BENT CARD YOU CAN'T BLOW OVER

Take a business card, bend the lengthwise edges and stand the card on a table. Ask any person to stand off and try to blow the card over. The stronger the person blows and the closer his face is to the card, the less likely the card is to turn over. The trick is done by standing about two feet from the table, and blowing lightly, directing your breath slightly in front of the card.

LANCASTER—Modern women who use cosmetics are only following an old custom.

Figuratively speaking, cosmetics were in style several thousand years ago. But in those ancient times, the procedure of the fair sex in touching up their features was considerably more difficult than that of today.

An Egyptian woman daintily dipped a wooden stick into an alabaster kohl pot and touched her eyebrows and eyelids with the solution.

Daughters of the sunny Nile wanted to make their eyes larger and the kohl, a mixture of sulphide of lead and green carbonate of copper, accomplished the desired result.

A small alabaster container, with the wooden kohl stick, is in the newly acquired museum of the Lancaster city schools. It holds some of the original kohl used many centuries ago.

Other relics, reproductions and specimens were received here from the Museum of the University of Pennsylvania and the Commercial Museum of Philadelphia under an arrangement by which public schools receive a number of relics annually by furnishing a guarantee that they will be properly cared for.

Several of the relics of antiquity go back several thousand years. A loom weight and spindle whorl from Mesopotamia were used about 3500 B. C., according to archaeologists. Replicas of vases and statues found in Egyptian tombs and the ruins of Pompeii are included in the collection.

An aged fragment of a letter on Greek papyrus, written in 257 B. C., and found in Heheli, Egypt, is in the collection.

LEWISTOWN—How a 15-year-old boy dressed as a girl when he and a companion aged 16 allegedly held up and robbed the Beaver Creek Inn is being told by State Police here.

Paul Walter, the youthful bandit, signed a confession admitting his part in the hold-up. Winfield Casner, 16, was named by police as his "pal."

According to police, Walter was dressed as a girl when the two robbed the proprietor of the inn. Casner had his coat turned inside out. Both were masked.

At the time they were taken into custody, Walter was carrying a .32 caliber revolver and Casner was said to have had a .22 rifle.

OUR DAILY FOOD

By COLONEL GOODBODY

BUDGET

I RECENTLY read of a woman who was raising a family on a very low income. The family included her husband, herself, their two children, a cat, a canary, two goldfish and a horned toad.

I can hear you saying "that was a rather large family"—and that is just what the woman herself decided.

It was too large a family to be supported decently. So they gave away the goldfish. That helped some, for the time, and money spent on the goldfish could then be distributed among the rest of the family. The canary earned his board and keep by singing. The cat paid his way by keeping mice from the cellar.

But seriously, this woman had some fine suggestions about low cost meals. For example, she would take an inexpensive cut of meat and make it appetizing. She said that she had to consider not only price and nutrition but also nutrition and attractiveness, and being eternally mindful of the tyrannous vitamin.

I'm going to read what she said about food: "I feed my family nourishing and tasty food and I do it at a minimum. I take shameless advantage of sales—I read advertisements daily.

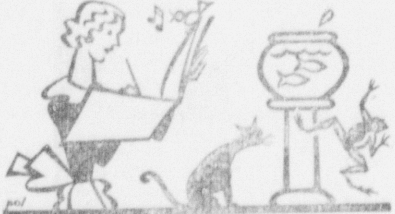

"My menus," she says, "are the most adjustable things in the world. If I had planned to buy leaf lettuce and head is cheaper, I buy head. If both are beyond my reach, and good cabbage is obtainable, I buy cabbage. If that is high, carrots make good salads. If I had planned on oranges and somebody offers a bargain in grapefruit, my family eats grapefruit. If all fruits run too high, I fall back on canned goods until fruit prices drop. If I had planned on pork, and veal or beef happen to be cheaper, we eat veal or beef—

"I practically never buy out of season," she says. "Most things are better home-grown and in season. In all my buying, I figure not in terms of nutrition alone, or price alone, but in terms of nutrition and interest, in relation to price."

Here's what she says about entertaining:

"We entertain but little, yet our entertaining is of the type I should enjoy most even if our income were many times what it is. *Pancake and sausage breakfasts had been my specialty long before the Coolidges borrowed the idea. Conversation is the chief spice of a meal anyhow; so we have pancake breakfasts and biscuit lunches—"

And interesting conversation, I think, is nearly as important as are vitamins and mineral salts, don't you agree?

And here's a low-cost budget menu:

Stuffed flank steak; browned potatoes; scalloped corn; whole wheat bread, and butter; orange gelatin, with custard sauce.

That sounds appetizing and inexpensive. The main part of the dinner could be cooked in the oven. The steak, the potatoes, and the corn—all at the same time. If you're planning to bake one thing in the oven—the meat for example, you might as well take advantage of the hot oven and bake something else in it too—that's very much to the budget point.

What Franklin Said in 57 Words

We doubt if anyone has ever set forth more forcibly such sensible advice. Franklin said:

"Save a little of thy income, and thy hide-bound pocket will soon begin to thrive and thou wilt never cry again with an empty stomach; neither will creditors insult thee, nor want oppress, nor hunger bite, nor will nakedness freeze thee. The whole hemisphere will shine brighter, and pleasure spring up in every corner of thy heart."

Mauve Piquancy

The effect aimed at in the newest model evening gown is piquancy. Above, Juliette Compton attains the desired note in a beige chiffon frock that displays puff sleeves, high neckline, cash and many ruffles. The old-fashioned note produces an intriguing effect.

How to Reduce Colds and Their Costs This Winter

One of Family's Biggest Problems Met With Vick "Control-of-Colds" Plan

Actual Test of the Plan Is Offered By Bristol Druggists On a Trial Guarantee

To most families this winter, the high costs of colds are an extra burden. Loss of time, health and money are involved. To reduce the drain of this burdensome family "Colds-Tax" is the purpose of the Vick Plan for better "Control-of-Colds"—to lessen their number, severity and duration.

Plan Follows New Discovery

The Vick Plan is made possible with Vicks Nose & Throat Drops. Based on a new idea for "preventing" colds, this new Vick discovery is companion to Vicks VapoRub, the modern way of "treating" colds. Each aids and supplements the other for better "Control-of-Colds."

Here, briefly, is the Vick Plan:

1.—Before a Cold Starts

Watch yourself whenever you have been exposed to anything that you know is apt to give you a cold, such as—

Contact with others having fresh colds—colds, stuffy, ill-ventilated rooms, public places—a night on a Pullman or a dusty automobile ride—sudden changes in temperature—inhalation smoke, dust, gases—excesses in living, such as over-eating, smoking or drinking, which reduce body resistance—after a hard day when you are over tired.

Then—if you feel that stuffy, sneezy irritation of the nasal passages, Nature's usual signal that a cold is coming on—use Vicks Nose Drops at once—just a few drops

GAELS ARE VICTORS;
CELTICS CAPTURE GAME

By T. M. Jono

The second half of the A. O. H. Basketball League got under way last night on the Hibernians' floor. In the first game of the evening, the Gaels defeated the Shamrocks, 33-28. In the second fray which was extended to two extra periods, the Celtics nosed out the Columbians, 35-33.

"Eddie" Roe was the star of the Gael triumph over the "Shams". This contest was closely fought from start to finish and keen-eyed shooting by Roe kept the Gaels in the lead throughout. Roe hit the cords for five double-deckers and four free shots for a total of fourteen points. G. Dougherty led the losers with eleven points.

At the end of the regulation period game, the Celtics-Columbians affair ended 29-29. An extra period was played and J. Brady put the Columbians into the lead by tossing a twin-pointer in from the side. However, with but a minute to go, Lake dropped a field goal into the net and the score was again tied.

Another five minute period was decided on and the game was under way for about one minute when Dave Ennis tossed in a field goal to give the Columbians a 33-31 lead. While in the act of shooting Lake was fouled and made one of his two tries cutting the Columbians' lead to one point which did not last long as Joe Mulligan was fouled and dropped in the try, tying the score at 33-all. With but a few seconds remaining to play "Mush" Brady tried a long shot from the center of the floor which dropped clean through the net as the final whistle blew ending the fray.

"Jimmy" Lake led the Celtics in scoring with seven from the floor and one from the fifteen foot mark. Ennis led the Columbians with eleven points, the result of five field goals and a foul.

Better

JIM shifted his knee gingerly and for the hundredth time counted the window panes that look out on the campus. He sighed. They still totaled twelve.

From a far end of the infirmary he heard a telephone ring. He half-wished he had told his folks of his injury. But what's the use of worrying them, he thought. Then the door opened. "Here's a call for you, Mr. Carter," said nurse Nurse Allen. "I'll connect this portable telephone here," and handed him the instrument.

A call—who could it be? Jim was puzzled. Then he heard the voice: "What's the matter, Jimmy? Your letter's a bit gloomy!"

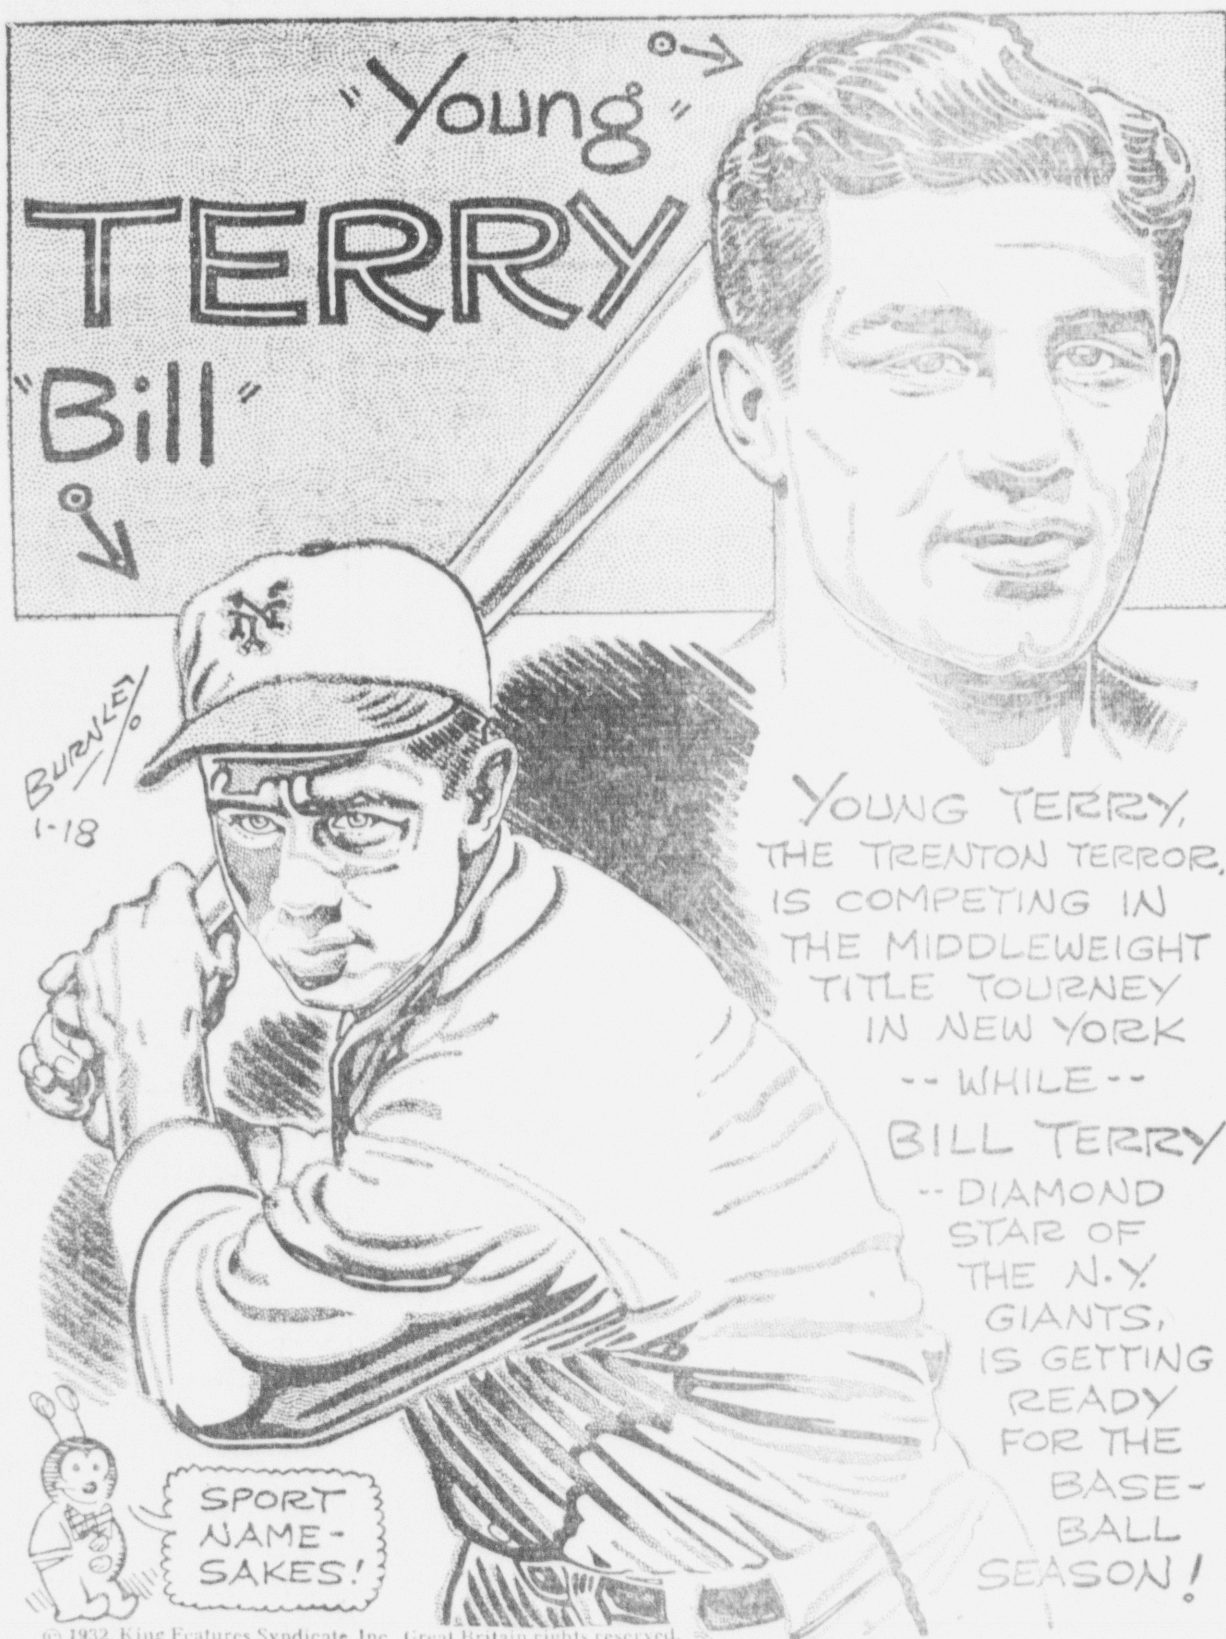

Jim wriggled happily, a broad grin on his face. "Hello, Mother—there's nothing wrong now!"

BILL TERRY

SPORT
SAKES!

WILL either or both of the hard-hitting Terry boys crash the portals of sport immortality and dash down championship lane this year?

Both Bill Terry, the Giants' ace first sacker, and young Terry, the human buzzsaw of boxing, almost placed their strong mitts on crowns during the past year. Both are expected to be very much in the limelight again during 1932.

The ball-playing Terry missed winning the National League batting title last season by a single hit and the Trenton middleweight is heir apparent to Mickey Walker's throne. With Mickey fighting draws with Jack Sharkey and aspiring to wear Heavyweight Champion Schmeling's crumpled garment, the Trenton kid's chances are mighty rosy.

When the statisticians of the National League figured the circuit's batting average down to the fourth point recently it was learned that Chick Hafey, the Cardinals' bespectacled outfielder, had come in first by the eyelash margin of 3-10 of 1 per cent.

Treading on the heels of Hafey's mark of .3489 was Bill Terry with .3486 and Jim Bottomley, another Cardinal slugger, with .3482. One more Texas leaguer by either Bill or Jim would have brought them the batting championship. To make being nosed out by such a microscopic margin seem even tougher to Terry was the fact that he had safely punched out the leather 213 times, which was a greater total than any of his rivals. Bill also tied Chuck Klein, of the Phillies, for the run scoring lead with 121 tallies.

What made Young Terry, of Trenton, N. J., the crown prince of the middleweights was the impressive win he chalked up last September against Jackie Fields, the ex-welterweight champion, in New York.

The whirlwind style of this boy, his relentless attack, his busy-izzy hitting, brought back memories to the fans of another great Terry of a bygone day, namely, "Terrible Terry" McGovern, who long lorded it over the world's featherweights a quarter century or so ago.

Fields, in the Terry go, was climbing out of his class, attempting to establish himself as a head-line middleweight, but he poked a tartar in the New Jerseyite, Jackie has always been known as an indomitable fighter who kept going all the time, but in the New York battle Terry had him going back-wards.

Many sport fans thought the Trenton youngster proved his right by this victory to title consideration. It certainly would be a great spectacle to see the buzz-saw and the Ramon Bulldog, if he decided to defend the title, try to put their teeth into each other in a title go.

But with Mickey's eye plastered on the heavyweight laurels, there seems to be small chance of such a match just at present, now that Mickey has been matched to meet Schmeling.

And with fans all over the country yearning for old-fashioned fighting tit-holders, young Terry looks like, exactly the man to give the boys in the gallery what they want.
